DEDICATION

Ce projet est dédié aux soldats de l'Armée du Nord qui, en 1815, motivés par le simple principe qu'une nation a le droit de choisir son propre gouvernement, ont traversé des rivières pour attaquer deux armées qui se préparaient à envahir leur pays.

L'Armée du Nord était dirigée héroïquement, mais pas toujours avec compétence, et elle était trahie quotidiennement.

C'est seulement par un compte rendu complet des événements que nous puissions apprécier ce que les soldats de l'Armée du Nord ont accompli: grace à leur sacrifice, leur drapeau flotte encore aujourd'hui.

This project is dedicated to the soldiers of the Armée du Nord, who, in 1815, motivated by the simple premise that a nation has the right to choose its own government, crossed a river and attacked two armies that were preparing to invade their country.

The Armée du Nord was led heroically, though not always competently, and it was betrayed daily.

Only with a complete accounting of these events can we appreciate what the soldiers of the Armée du Nord accomplished: because of their sacrifice, their flag still flies.

INTRODUCTION

This is Volume III of the Operations of the Armée du Nord : 1815, a reference of correspondence produced by Napoleon's last army, chronicling its organization and movements, until its defeat at Waterloo.

SOURCES

This reference was compiled from the sources listed below, with the exception of pieces from private collections, which will be individually notated. Each source is preceded by a code used to identify the source of items in the Chronological Summary.

If an item has a corresponding registry entry, the index of the registry entry will be indicated in the Sender column. Soult has three registries, thus the actual registry will be indicated, as well as, the item's index.

If an item has an original document, the source for this document will be indicated in the Original column using the source code.

Some items have both a registry entry and an original document, and both will be indicated. Exceptions, such as, a registry entry indicating a single recipient, but matching originals for other recipients, will be notated when necessary.
